Cello Health launches in Germany with new Berlin office, appoints regional directors

Cello Health PLC (LON:CLL) has launched its German branch with a new office in Berlin while also appointing two regional directors.

The healthcare-focused consultancy said on Monday that the two regional directors were Heike Tombrink, who was also appointed head of Cello Health Insight Germany, and Matthias Heurich, who would be supporting digital innovation.

Tombrink has prior experience in leading small and large teams in and outside of matrix organisations - that is where some individuals sometimes report to more than one leader - while Heurich specialises in applied machine learning and artificial intelligence for natural language processing.

Commenting on the news, Jane Shirley, Cello's chief executive, said the new branch in mainland Europe would bring "a number of benefits" while also serving as a first step in providing additional ground support for the company's European clients and allowing access to a wider talent pool.

In lunchtime trading on Tuesday, Cello shares were 1.2% lower at 122p.
