Poutney bought 28,090 shares at 83p a pop, laying out £23.306.

Poutney now owns 3.44mln shares in Franchise Brands, roughly equivalent to 4.45% of the company's issued share capital.

2.30pm: Eurasia Mining slides as it signs EPC contract for a gold project in Russia

Eurasia Mining PLC (LON:EUA) shares fell 8.6% to 0.42p after it signed an engineering procurement and construction (EPC) contract with Chinese company Sinosteel.

The contract is for the development of the two million ounce Monchetundra palladium, platinum and gold project in Russia. The EPC contract comes with an associated mine finance package.

The bulk of this mine finance comes in the form of a US$149.5mln ten year loan facility at six month LIBOR plus 3.5%.

1.30pm: Nostra Terra flies after CEO increases his stake

A director putting his money where his mouth is usually goes down well in the market as Matt Lofgran has proved.

Lofgran is the chief executive officer of Nostra Terra Oil and Gas Company plc (LON:NTOG), and he has just splashed out on 550,000 shares at 1.7p a pop, taking his stake in the company up to 3.31%.

Shares in Nostra were up 9.4% at 1.75p.

12.30pm: Bango's partnership with Spotify hits the right note

Bango PLC (LON:BGO) shares rose 8.9% after the company entered a resale and bundling partnership with music streaming outfit, Spotify Technology.

The AIM-listed mobile commerce firm said under the partnership, Spotify's service will be available for operators to bundle with their own mobile or fixed subscription plans.

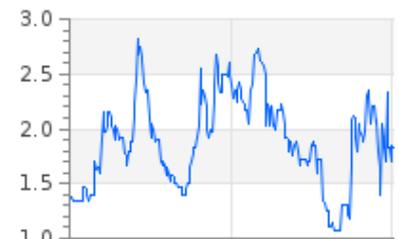

Bango said its Resale technology would allow Spotify to reach new customers while its data insight capabilities would support the targeting of specific customers with new offers to generate higher adoption.
